Board approves 4% tax increase

By Jamie Baker-Nantz
Editor

The Grant County Board of Education voted 3 to 1 to approve a 4 percent increase to the current tax rate earlier this month.

The rate goes from 52.9 cents to 56.1 cents per $100 of assessed value. That means a homeowner with a $124,300 home, the median home value in Grant County, will be paying $697.32 or $39.78 more than last year.

The motor vehicle tax rate will be 55.3 cents and the utility tax rate will be 3 cents. These are the same rates as last year.

The projected revenue from the real and personal property and tangible tax is $5,511,205.

Last year, the district received $5,506,485.

Did you know?

- Grant County school taxes will be almost $40 more on a median home.

The Grant County School District ranks 90th out of 174 school districts in real estate tax rankings.

In comparison, the Williamstown school district ranks 11th at 88.4., while Silver Grove ranks first at 128.8, Covington ranks second at 111.7 and Walton-Verona ranks third at 100.6.

Charlotte Schmidt, a board member, voted against the increase because she wasn't in favor of a tax increase.

"I just don't think it's actually necessary," Schmidt said. "At most, the compensating rate was the best option this year."

Charlotte Wethington, a parent and recovery advocate, spoke about her son, Casey, and his fatal encounter with heroin. Wethington was one of six panelists at a town hall meeting on Sept. 26 at GCHS that dealt with heroin in Grant County. Photos by Jamie Baker-Nantz.

After the talk, what's next?

The Champions for a Drug Free Grant County organized the town hall meeting last week to begin a community discussion on a heroin epidemic in the county.

The group's next focus is on National Prescription Take Back Day on Oct. 26.

"Most addiction starts with prescription medication use. We want to get unused medication off the streets," said Camille Croweak, chair of the Champions group.

Unused or outdated prescription medicine can be taken to the Grant County Sheriff's Office, 212 Barnes Road, Williamstown from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Oct. 26.

Medication is also accepted during regular business hours at any Grant County Drugs location or the Grant County Sheriff's Office.

You can do all the right things in your home and addiction can still come.

Recovering addict shares his story

"I'm a recovering addict, but I've been sober seven years," said Will Smoot, standing before more than 150 of his neighbors, family, friends and strangers last week.

The crowd broke into applause.

Smoot started to speak, but had to choke back tears as he told of his downward spiral into heroin addiction; a story that he had never publicly shared.

Smoot shared his story as part of a Town Hall Meeting held on Sept. 26 at Grant County High School, which was sponsored by Champions For A Drug Free Grant County, in response to a growing heroin epidemic in the community.

Event raises money for Alzheimer's Association Oct. 12 at Grant County Park

By Jamie Baker-Nantz

Kellie Graham, a former Grant County resident, understands that life can change in an instant.

She noticed that her mother, Ola Haven, had started to forget things. Graham chalked it up to the aging process and wasn't surprised when two years ago her mother was diagnosed with dementia.

"I could deal with that because she still knew me and she still knew my kids," Graham said.

But a car ride to the emergency room for her mother changed all their lives.

"Her electrolytes were low and her doctor told us to bring her to the ER," Graham said. "She got car sick and by the time we got to the hospital, she couldn't walk or talk and she had no idea who we were."

Days and then weeks passed and her mother remained unable to get out of bed, communicate with her family and was unable to care for herself.

"We thought she had a stroke, but then they told us that she had Alzheimer's," Graham said.

Kellie Graham, right, will be walking on Oct. 12 to raise funds for the Alzheimer's Association in honor of her parents, Ola and Hale Havens. Photo submitted.

WORTH REPEATING:

‘Cinema should make you forget you are sitting in a theater.’ - Roman Polanski

PERSONALLY SPEAKING

Love of movies will never end

I am a movie nerd. For those who know me well, this admission will come at no surprise.

However, for those who only know me casually or through work, I am truly disturbed when it comes to my movie-watching habits.

I know that there are a good amount of people out there like me.

I’ve seen them.

I’ve met them.

But, for the average person, I am beyond weird when it comes to the amount of films I would like to and have watched during my short 34 years on this planet.

Before I got married to my wonderful wife and had two amazing sons, my addiction was a lot worse,

I would see nearly every movie that would come out on a given weekend, just to say that I had seen the latest and greatest Hollywood had to offer.

My tastes vary greatly from blockbusters and smaller independent movies most people have not heard of to cinematic classics from before I was born.

One of my favorite actors happens to be Humphrey Bogart, if that is any clue.

While my wife joins me at the theater when we can get a babysitter, most of the time I see movies by myself.

Yes, I am that guy.

Granted, not many people are willing to go to the movies as much as I would like or would like to see some of my choices.

As I previously mentioned, going out to the movies has died down tremendously in the past six years.

Now, I go to maybe one every other week, sometimes two if I am lucky.

The combination of work, spending quality time with the family, my son’s soccer games and activities and household chores just don’t allow for much free time.

Therefore, I have to fill my need in other ways.

I now watch more movies on DVD, especially after realizing I can save money by checking out movies at the library.

Without a lot of idle time to sit and watch a movie on the couch, I incorporate it any way I can into my day.

In fact, most of the time I watch snippets of a movie when I can, pause it and return to it later.

That’s not the ideal way to watch a movie, but what can I say, it gets the job done.

When I fold laundry, I will watch 20 minutes of a DVD in my room.

When I get ready in the morning, I whiz through another 10 to 15 minutes of a movie.

Before you know it, the movie is over and I move on to the next selection.

I am ashamed to admit it, but I have been known to even plug in my portable DVD player in my car, put in some headphones and watch a DVD as I drive to work.

Pretty much the most dangerous and stupidest thing I can imagine, I know, but at least I tend to listen to the movie more than simply stare at the screen instead of the road.

It has always been my dream to be a film critic because it seems like the perfect job for me.

It combines my love of writing with my love of cinema.

Are you kidding, getting paid to see movies?

Sign me up now.

While I briefly did write reviews for a daily newspaper, on top of all my “normal” work, I realize how unrealistic that dream is.

Most reviewers are online these days so unless I start my own Web site, it will likely remain a pipe dream.

Regardless, I recently got a taste of what the life of a film critic would be like by attending a nine-day film festival in Austin, Texas named Fantastic Fest.

This amazing festival filled with horror, science fiction, thrillers and other genre films from around the globe has been going for nine years.

It started as a smaller, four-day fest and has ballooned into a crazy adventure that has to be seen to be believed.

Out of its nine-year existence, I have only missed three or four years.

However, this year was the first time I had been back in three years.

I am not sure that my body and mind were quite prepared for the experience, but I survived, seeing about 37 movies in a nine-day period.

Exhaustion doesn’t even begin to describe the feeling at the end of the festival.

To just give a brief description of what Fantastic Fest is like I will give a few of the highlights.

- Keanu Reeves, who premiered his directorial debut, high-fived me on the way into a boxing ring where he debated the festival’s founder before a round of boxing took place.

- Some of the movies I saw included an Indian film about a man turned fly seeking revenge after his death, a Japanese tale about a police force transformed into little kids, a crazy film shot in Disney Land without authorized permission and a Norwegian movie called Detective Downs about a wanna-be private eye with Down’s Syndrome. (As offensive as it sounds, the movie actually was sweet, funny and entertaining.)

- I witnessed a secret, early screening of one of the best movies made that I have seen. The film, “Gravity,” starring Sandra Bullock and George Clooney, is unlike anything you have seen and must be seen on the big screen. I find it hard to believe it was not actually filmed in space.

- The closing night party featured an exploding car, a man on fire jumping from a five-story building and free tattoos.

In the end, the festival lived up to all of my expectations.

While it was sad to see it end, especially not knowing when or if I would ever return, it was exhilarating to see my family again.

I would like to say that my time in Austin filled up my movie-loving gas tank for awhile, but I know better.

I will still sneak away when I can to see a minute here and a minute there of whatever movie is in my DVD player.

My love for movies is simply a thirst that can not be quenched, but, it is sure fun trying.

Education is key

Education is at the core of the American dream. It’s a pathway to success and a key to a future of hope and opportunity for our children. For our public schools, this pathway is often tough and complicated. This path includes transporting our children to and from school, feeding our children breakfast and lunch, keeping our children safe and most importantly, educating our children. Many children experience some of our community’s most serious problems: drugs, homelessness, displacement, domestic violence, hunger and material poverty. Each friendly, nurturing person along this path builds positive relationships with our children. At the heart, are our teachers, whose deep devotion to their jobs can make a difference. We have great teachers in every school, doing whatever it takes for their kids. They are at the core of what is working in our public schools.

The standards adopted by the state of Kentucky (effective 2011-2012 school year) are substantially different from previous ones. Per Kentucky Education Commissioner, Terry Holliday, “we expected a significant drop in the proficiency scores during the first few years . . . teachers and students alike need time to adjust to the change in textbooks and subject matters. That generally takes three to five years.” Every year our school systems are required to change and/or implement new state and federal legislation. Many of these are unfunded mandates. Our local school systems struggle and wrestle with these financial issues. Our teachers struggle and wrestle with creating lesson plans that encompass the latest standards while engaging all of their students. The job of educating our children has become increasingly complicated.

We will not always agree on the methods and decisions, but supporting our schools and learning more about our public education system, will help us work together for positive change. The stakes are extremely high for our children and our county. Our children and their successes are the hope for our future.

DOWN AND DIRTY

Cool temperatures initiate bloom

How about this weather! I am anticipating a good orchid season coming up because our temperatures have been so mild, especially with night time temperatures dipping into the 50s already. These cool nights are a piece of the puzzle in order to get some plants to bloom indoors in the winter.

When attempting to grow tropical plants we are met with the challenge of mimicking their native habitat which is difficult inside our homes; we can allow Mother Nature to take care of some of this, outside, for now. Move some of your orchids, holiday cacti and clivia outdoors for the remainder of the season because we can initiate bud set through managing day length and nighttime temperatures.

The flowering of many plants (including some native species) is initiated by how many hours of light and dark the plant receives in a 24-hour period. Likely the most famous tropical that is photoperiodic is the poinsettia. How many people have tried to initiate the bracts to turn red by sticking their poinsettia in the closet for 12 hours each day? I usually just buy new ones each December!

There are some other photoperiodic bloomers, however, that I hold onto year after year; and I have discovered a reliable way to get them to bloom that is quite simple. I leave many of the plants outside through the month of October (or later, depending on the weather) so that they can naturally experience shorter days, and longer, cooler nights.

I send my clivia, holiday cacti and several different species of orchids outdoors for some chilling time this time of the year. I have had amazing success with this simple plan. Follow the forecasted weather and take note of nighttime temperatures. If a couple of nights dip below the desired temperature bring the plants in until conditions become desirable again.

Cooler weather ideal for cacti

The holiday cacti (the Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter cactus) can be left outside to experience the longer and cooler nights of late summer and fall until nighttime temperatures consistently drop below 50 degrees. There have been some years when the plants have already set visible buds on the stems while they are still in the protected corner behind the garage.

We typically think of orchids as being sensitive to the cold when, in fact, several species are quite appreciative of a little nighttime chill. The popular Phalaenopsis, or butterfly orchid, appreciates a light breeze and some cool evenings to about 55 degrees. Once nighttime temperatures drop below 55 degrees bring the plant back indoors, provide bright light and fertilize with a balanced fertilizer every other week.

Other species of orchids that like some chilling and light treatment include Dendrobium, to about 55 degrees; Oncidium can go as low as 45 degrees; and Cympridium to about to about 55 degrees. Remember that there are many different orchid species so for the enthusiast it is best to get some comprehensive information on the specific species you are growing.

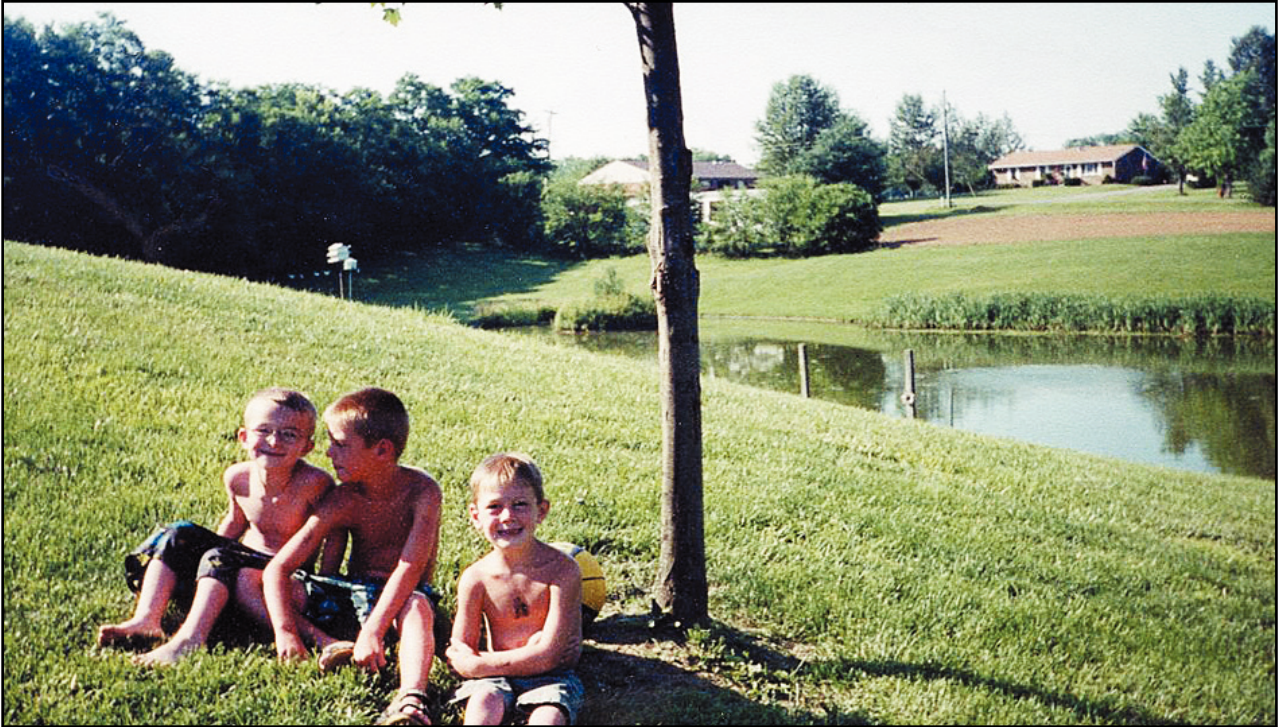

Cattleya will be content to stay indoors or if they are outside in a shady area for the summer bring them in when nighttime temperatures consistently drop below 58 to 60 degrees. Brassia, or the spider orchid, prefers a warmer reality as well, so bring this one in along with the cattleya.

Clivia will also benefit from some chilling. I leave mine out until temperatures dip below 50 degrees. Once they are brought indoors I set them in bright light and water sparingly. They have low water requirements in the winter and reward me with blooms based on this neglect.

For many, although not exclusively, a dry period in the winter is recommended. This is where understanding the native habitat of a plant comes in handy. If you come from a place where it rains all summer and is dry all winter then this is likely what you will prefer in someone's house in Kentuckiana. Keep Clivia, Dendrobium and holiday cacti on the dry side during the winter months.

FAITH & VALUES

RELIGIOUS VIEWS

What's on your mind?

When I open up my Facebook page, I immediately am asked to give a status update that reads... "What's on your mind?" Now, depending on the day or the hour what has just happened in my life, that question is loaded. There is a lot on my mind most of the day and the temptation of sharing it on social media is a strong temptation. Whether it is a comment on the latest political upheaval, or a comment on Miley Cyrus and her lack of discretion, or the frustration I had earlier in the day, many of us want to share our thoughts. However, I wonder why? Do we really think people care what we think about politics, religion or Miley? Or is it something else?

I believe we all have a need. A need to be understood and have people "like" our status updates and really "like" us. We all want to fit in, we all want to be the most insightful person in the room and the funniest. We post thoughts, opinion and even recipes with a secret desire to see how many people will like or comment on our status. What gives?

Darrell MORGAN
 Pastor's Corner

I believe what we are all pinning for by our Facebook updates, our tweets, and our Instagram photos is to belong. We want to belong and be accepted by people. We measure our value by how many friends we have on social media. Kind of sad isn't it? In our quest to be a part of something, we have settled for acceptance online. The problem is not directly with social media. I value it a lot. The problem is our move away from meaningful relationships and conversations that build true friendship and community.

Now, this is a column about faith. So let me get to it. I believe that true community and belonging should and can happen in the context of the local church. The church is the place where we find meaningful relationships, do life together and work out our faith together. What if we worried more about our neighbor and fellow church member as much as we do about what our "friends" had for breakfast? Maybe better concerns are; who am I praying for? Who am I ministering to? Who do I need to invite to church?

Developing relationships takes energy and risks and intentionality. So when we get on Facebook and are tempted to share our great insights, may we also call someone and share with them how they are important. Maybe what is on our mind is not as important as what action we take? Maybe a better status update question is "How did you bless someone today?"

Take care and I hope you "like" my column!

GCHS JROTC sweeps competition at ECU

The Grant County High School JROTC traveled to Eastern Kentucky University for the Senior ROTC Raider Challenge on Sept. 28.

There were 37 teams from 23 different high schools competing which equates to at least 370 cadet competitors. But, there are two alternates on each team, accounting for another 74 cadets, which equals to 444 cadets actively participating in the competition at any given moment. With each team's cadet support squads there were well over 550 JROTC Cadets on the ground.

The GCHS "Dog Soldiers" won the overall tug-of-war finishing first out of 37 teams and represented Grant County well in other competitions such as the telephone pole run carry.

"It was a very challenging competition with some great teams providing some hard fought competition for our 'dog soldiers,'" said CSM (retired) Charles Duffee, senior Army JROTC instructor at GCHS.

Grant County's JROTC also excelled on the Modified Physical Fitness Test posting a team average of 273 which allowed them to win the event.

"This fantastic performance and this exertion deserves a well earned congratulations," Duffee said. "These students earned all the honors because of all the hard work they are putting forth at our practices. Getting in shape it pays off with these demonstrated results."

The 'Dog Soldiers' will compete in West Virginia on Oct. 12.

Editor's Note: The popular Woody series by Leigh Anee Florence is back for a 10-week statewide literacy project. This year's theme is Kentucky agriculture. Do you take food for granted? Woody believes milk, eggs, chicken, and all his favorite treats originate from the grocery store or restaurant. Mom and Dad arrange for the family to visit farms all across Kentucky so the pups can see first-hand all the hard work farmers put forth in getting food from the ground to the grocery store. Read along as the pups plant corn, eat their first tomato right off the vine, gather eggs from the hen house, and even try to get chocolate milk from a brown cow.

Woody: Outstanding in His field

Woody said bull riding is an event in the rodeo. What are other rodeo events?

Pa and Granny told the pups they had been married 52 years. What year did they wed? If Pa was 21 and Granny was 18 when they married, how old are they now?

It takes 3 to 5 minutes per cow to retrieve all her milk. Let's pretend the Wades have 50 cows to milk. Assuming they milk one cow after the other, how long would it take to get all the milking finished? Remember, cows must be milked twice a day. How many total minutes of the day are spent milking?

Pa explained what a Holstein cow looked like and what a Jersey cow looked like. Create a picture of a dairy farm. Be sure to include both types of cows in your picture. Have your teacher take a photograph of you holding your picture.

Make sure you cut out Chapter 4 and paste it in your notebook. Email a photo of your with your scrapbook to Woody. Invite Woody to your school or event during the course of Outstanding in the Field and have him put his paw print in the scrapbook!

Chapter 4

Use the words from Chapter 4 to complete the crossword puzzle.

"What's the matter, Woody?" Chloe asked. "Why are you cowered in the floorboard of the truck?"

"Are you scared of that bull in the field," Mr. Tom asked. I nodded, but he said, "That bull's in the pen and couldn't get you if he tried."

I wanted to believe Mr. Tom, but I'd seen bulls when we traveled to watch Murray State University's rodeo team compete. Mom was excited that her alma mater was one of less than 15 colleges and universities in the Ozark Region with a rodeo team. I covered my eyes since I was too afraid to watch bulls throw folks off their backs. I had also seen on TV where people in other countries waved a red cape in front of the bull that made the bulls go crazy!

"Bulls are born with the innate ability to buck and kick, but rodeo riders use techniques to encourage bulls to buck," Mr. Tom explained, coaxing me from the floorboard. "Besides, wouldn't you buck and kick if someone were on top of you?" With that, I emerged from the floorboard and took my seat just in time to see an older couple sitting in a swing on the porch of a beautiful old farmhouse that was white with black shutters.

"Whoa, doggies," a sweet older man wearing a long-sleeve plaid shirt and straw hat said as he walked to the car. "You must be Woodsey and Closey," he said, making us both giggle.

"I'm Woody and this is my brother, Chloe – I mean my sister, Chloe," I said, making everyone giggle more.

"We're the Wades. I'm Hollis and this is my bride of 52 years, Anna. Most folks 'round here just call us Granny and Pa."

"How would you pups like some fresh baked bread with jam and cold milk?" Granny asked, making our mouths water. Closey, uh, Chloe and I already felt at home, making it easier to say goodbye to Mr. Tom.

"This is the most delicious milk ever," Chloe told Granny as we ate our snack.

"It's so rich and creamy," I added, hoping Granny would offer me more.

"It's because it's fresh," Pa explained while Granny refilled my glass.

"You mean you just bought it?" I asked, remembering to wipe my "milkstache."

"This didn't come from a store, son. This came straight from Patty – that ol' Holstein you saw when you pulled in," Pa said.

"You mean that bull?" I asked, making Pa and Granny look at each other and laugh aloud.

"Finish your snack and I'll show you around," Pa said.

Walking from the house to the barns, Pa told us about dairy farming in Kentucky. "Based on your comment about milk coming from a bull, I take it you aren't familiar with dairy farming," he said. "I'll start at the beginning. Dairy farming is the process of harvesting milk from female cows – and sometimes goats and sheep too. Here in Kentucky, there are about 900 licensed dairy farms with approximately 70,000 milk cows. The most popular milk cow is the Holstein followed by the Jersey cow. See the black and white cow over yonder?" Pa asked, pointing up ahead. "That's a Holstein. And that brown cow with a white muzzle and black nose is our Jersey cow."

"What's that big brown cow with the fuzzy ears?" Chloe asked.

"That's our Brown Swiss," Granny said.

"This is our milking barn," Pa continued. "We milk every morning and every night. It takes about three to five minutes per cow to get all her milk. Each cow produces about 6 gallons a day. Kentucky ranks 27th in milk production."

"Why do you have all these big machines?" Chloe asked Pa.

"It's how we milk."

"I thought you used your paws, uh, I mean hands," I said.

"We did before all this new equipment came about. Would you doggies like to milk a cow?"

After making sure our paws, the bucket, the cow and everything in between were clean, we were ready. Chloe sat on a milking stool underneath Gertie the Jersey cow while I sat on an upside-down bucket milking Bonnie the Brown Swiss. Following instructions, we kept a bucket between our knees and gently squeezed the udders of the cows. Before we knew it, we heard milk hitting our buckets. I felt something move across my leg. It was the gray kitty I'd seen earlier.

"Go ahead and give Bunny a drink," Pa said, referring to the cat. I was getting ready to hand my bucket to Bunny when Pa said, "Just squirt Bunny with the udder." Obeying, I squirted Bunny, and she lapped the milk right from the cow's udder.

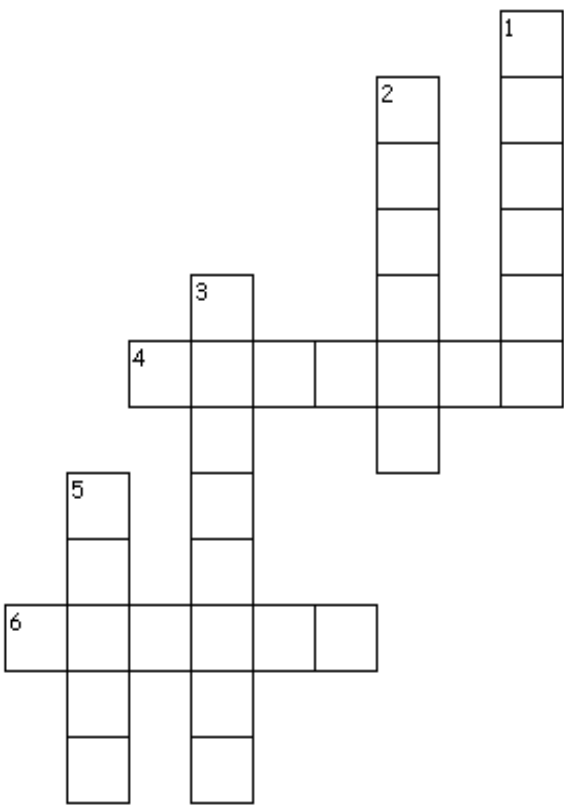

Seeing the milk, I was surprised and even more horrified as I looked in my bucket. I had made a major mistake and didn't know how I was going to tell Granny and Pa!

Grant boys golf ends season with 9-0 record

By Wade Holland
Sports Correspondent

Despite failing to reach their ultimate goal of earning a spot in the state tournament, the Grant County Braves ended the 2013 golf season this week with heads held high after completing one of the most successful seasons in recent memory.

Grant County shot an above-average 326 at Monday's regional championships held at the A.J. Jolly Golf Course in Alexandria, finishing well off the lead and out of contention for a spot as a team in the state championships. The Braves had the same luck with no individuals scoring high enough to advance past regionals.

While admitting the finish was disappointing, first-year head coach Cale Barr said it did nothing to tarnish the great achievements accomplished by his team this season, which included a perfect 9-0 record in match play. The Braves were also well represented while appearing in some of the state's best tournaments throughout the regular season.

"I'm really proud of the guys. They did a very good job this season and have a lot to be proud of," said Barr. "Of course, we would have liked to have finished a little better than we did, but it was still a very good season."

There were several factors that played a role in Grant County's finish at regionals, including the way the course played as well as the pressures that come with being under the spotlight on the big stage at the regional championships.

"It was a much tougher course today," said Barr. "And of course the pressure of the regional tournament is something young guys always struggle with. It's a lot of emphasis put on one golf tournament."

While some of Grant County's top golfers were not their normal selves, senior Trey Adams turned in his best score ever with a team-leading 78. It was the third straight event where Adams had turned in his personal best score, a fitting end to his high school career, said Barr, who added that he expects Adams to continue playing at the collegiate level.

"Trey is a great kid and a great team leader. He is a class act," said Barr. "There's not a much better kid out there than Trey. And I'm very happy that he improved the way he did and finished strong."

Following Adams' 78 was junior Cody Kellam with a 79 and Jacob Vrolijk with an 82. Kyle West shot an 84, while Alex Thompson came in with an 85.

Bourbon County won the team championship with a 306. Mason County was a strong runner up with a score of 310. Both teams will be represented at the state championships scheduled for next week in Bowling Green.

More than 200 turned out for the Town Hall Meeting on heroin and its impact on Grant County on Sept. 26. The meeting was sponsored by the Champions for a Drug Free Grant County group. Those in attendance heard from law enforcement, community members and physicians. Photo by Jamie Baker-Nantz

HEROIN: A COMMUNITY CRISIS

By Jamie Baker-Nantz
Editor

In 2012, Grant County Sheriff’s Deputies made seven heroin-related arrests. From Jan. 2013 to Sept. 26, 2013, deputies have made 52 heroin-related arrests. “We’ve got some major problems on our hands,” said Grant County Sheriff Chuck Dills. Dills was one of six panelists at a Heroin Town Hall meeting held Sept. 26 at Grant County High School. Other panelists included: Charlotte Wethington, parent and recovery advocate; Dr. Mina (Mike) Kalfas, physician; Dr. Jeremy Engle, physician; Wanda Hammons, Grant County magistrate and Emergency Medical Technician and Will Smoot, a person in long-term recovery. The event was sponsored by Champions For A Drug Free Grant County and was designed to provide the community with information on the heroin epidemic, how it is affecting Grant County and to distribute information on available resources.

More than 200 parents, teachers, students, law enforcement personnel, elected officials and concerned citizens attended the meeting. “We think the meeting went well,” said Camille Croweak, chair of the Champions group. “The community got great information from the panelists and from the resource tables in the lobby as to what treatment options are available. We want the community to understand that heroin is not just a problem in Cincinnati or Covington, but it’s what is happening right here in this community.” Croweak said the Champions are planning another town hall meeting for the spring, but are turning their attention now to getting unused prescription medication off the streets as part of National Prescription Take Back Day on Oct. 26. “Most addiction starts with prescription medication use,” she said.

LAW ENFORCEMENT PERSPECTIVE:

Dills said when he began his career in law enforcement in 1988, Grant County’s main drug problem was marijuana, followed by methamphetamine. “Heroin was something in California and we didn’t deal with it, but heroin has taken over the county in the last few years,” Dills said. Deputy Tony Stigers, who handles most drug investigations for the GCSO, showed a video of syringes found in a Dry Ridge motel room where two women were trading sex for money and drugs. He also showed video of syringes found in the bushes at a Crittenden apartment complex and used syringes and bloody gauze found in the trashcan at a Dry Ridge home. “We’re concerned about school children finding these discarded syringes and picking them up and contracting a disease from them,” Dills said. Stigers said, on a recent police call, a woman answered her door with blood dripping down her arm. “We found the syringe with heroin in it in her trash,” Stigers said. He also said that male and female teenagers have been charged recently with prostitution in Grant County to get money to buy heroin because they are already addicted. “We’re seeing 15-year-olds prostitute here to older people to get their pills to take north to trade for heroin,” Stigers said. “People are going to Cincinnati and trading on the street corner a TV or a gun to get heroin to use,” Dills said. Dills said his office has limited manpower and resources to deal with the growing heroin problem and the lack of facilities for treatment. “Addiction is definitely a disease and we need the community to lobby to get rehab centers in our community,” Dills said.

A MOTHER’S PERSPECTIVE

Charlotte Wethington was a good mom. She tried to raise her son, Casey, in a normal, happy home, but none of that stopped him from dying from a heroin overdose in 2002. Casey was 23 years old. “You can do all the right things in your home and addiction can still come,” Wethington said. “I was in my son’s business. He ate dinner with his family. He got good grades. He went to church.” Wethington said she suspected something was going on with her son, but she didn’t confirm drug use for a long time. After high school, her son saw a drug counselor who told the family that “Casey just liked to walk on the edge, but he wouldn’t go over the edge.” Casey went onto attend the University of Cincinnati. On a trip home, he left his backpack and that’s when she found marijuana.

Her husband took it and burned it in their fireplace. “That’s the mistake I made,” she said. “By not putting it back and calling the police when Casey came home. I don’t want you to make the same mistake I did.” He moved from marijuana to pills and then to heroin. Casey overdosed three times on heroin. The third time was the last time. “We waited for him to want to beat the addiction, for him to lose enough and to hit rock bottom, but those are myths,” she said passionately. “No one wants to be addicted and while we were waiting for those to happen, he died in the process.” His family donated his organs so that he could live on. Charlotte also decided the best way to honor her son was to fight. She began a relentless campaign and in 2004 the Matthew Casey Wethington Act For Substance Abuse Intervention was passed, which allows parents, relatives or friends to petition the courts and get involuntary substance abuse treatment. While some treatment options are free, petitioners must agree to pay for the treatment if the court orders it. “I didn’t realize how accessible and affordable drugs were,” Wethington said. “I’m glad to see you here tonight because you’ve taken a huge step in addict recovery.” TREATMENT OPTIONS: Dr. Mina (Mike) Kalfas, a Falmouth physician, is one of a small group of doctors who specialize in treating addictions. His message is that heroin addiction is a disease that will require justice centers, law enforcement and the medical community to work together to combat this growing epidemic. “Addiction really is a chemically induced brain damage that can get better,” Kalfas said. “We know if we can treat some, not all, they’re brain function can be back to normal. Dr. Jeremy Engel, a St. Elizabeth physician in Bellevue, believes the medical community has not met its obligation concerning addiction. “Whether it’s alcohol, heroin or tobacco use, which is an addiction, we’re not doing our job,” he said. Engel is part of a leadership committee from the region which is working on a mission statement that outlines a course of action for dealing with the heroin epidemic. “We’ve got to get more doctors in addiction treatment,” Engel said. “We’ve got to retrain the medical community to treat addiction like other health issues.”

LOCAL PERSPECTIVE: Wanda Hammons has spent many years working in the field of emergency medicine. She’s seen first hand how heroin is impacting the community. Hammons said she had recently responded to an emergency call where the mother of two small children had passed out from a heroin overdose and left her two small children in the bathtub. “Used to be that you didn’t have to have a deputy or police officer with you on every call, but now you do,” she said. “What we are seeing in homes, it’s just terrible.”

Smoot, 33, of Crittenden, grew up in a Grant County home with two hard-working parents, one a teacher and one a chemist. He was surrounded by family and went to church. He had a large group of friends and enjoyed spending his free time with them. “The year before I started high school, I smoked marijuana,” Smoot said. “For the next four to five years, I couldn’t function unless I was high and I stumbled through life.” As Smoot’s story unfolded, Grant County High School’s auditorium was quiet, despite a mix of children and adults in the crowd. Smoot said he managed, for a while, to live a double life, even having friends who did drugs and friends who did not, but as the addiction consumed him, he fell farther into a hole. “I stole money from my parents on a regular basis,” Smoot said. “I lied, I cheated and I did some really bad things to some really good people. The biggest mistake I made was turning my back on the people who loved me and wanted to help me. At that point in my life, I was worthless.” Smoot said his addiction started when he was 21 and began taking prescription medication for an injury. “The doctor prescribed it, so I thought it was OK,” Smoot said. Smoot said his relationship with his parents had been good, until the drugs. “My dad means more to me than anyone and I fought with him one day because he wouldn’t give me a ride to Cincinnati to get drugs,” Smoot said. “After a while it rules your life and you think about it from the time you wake up until you go to sleep,” he said. I’d do anything for that next fix. My whole life revolved around how I was going to get high.” Smoot even overdosed on heroin and said within an hour of getting out of the hospital, he went out and got high again. This pattern of behavior continued until Smoot’s dad told him he wanted his son back. That’s when Smoot decided to get clean. He found a methadone clinic in Indiana and that’s where he put his life back together. It took him eight years. Often times, his mother drove him daily to the clinic for treatment. Smoot’s life looks different today than it did in the drug-induced haze. He’s been working the same job for five years, he met and married his wife and they have a 4-year-old daughter. Last year, the couple built a new home. “My wife makes sure I stay clean,” he said. “I have a beautiful daughter. The most important thing, I found God in my life.”

The crowd broke into applause and a chorus of “amens.” Smoot said he has made peace with his choices, but it’s the next generation he’s concerned about. “We have to change the way we are as a society,” he said. “Bibles aren’t allowed in school, but go down the road to the jail and they want you to read the Bible, that’s got to change,” he said, to another round of applause and amens from the crowd. “I’ve made a lot of bad decisions and lost a decade of my life to addiction,” Smoot said. “All it took was one time to try it and I was addicted. I’ve heard teenagers say the first drug they tried was heroin and that’s not what I want my daughter to face.”

Since that diagnosis, her mother has been moved to a nursing home for 24-hour care, which brought her to Grant Manor in Williamstown.

"That's been the hardest thing I've ever done, leaving her in a strange place with strange people, but they're so sweet and kind," Graham said.

Graham, having worked in the health care industry for a number of years, currently as the manager of informatics and an Ambulatory Certified Epic Trainer for St. Elizabeth Health Care, was familiar with Alzheimer's and its impact to families.

Every 68 seconds someone in the U.S. develops Alzheimer's disease, a disease that affects nearly 55,000 people in Greater Cincinnati.

Graham's voice cracked and tears filled her eyes.

"It depends on the day if she knows me, but she always knows dad because he visits a lot," Graham said.

IF YOU GO:

- Alzheimer's Association Walk To End Alzheimer's
- Sat., Oct. 12
- 10 a.m. - "Forget Me Not" ceremony
- Grant Co. Park

But Alzheimer's wasn't finished with Graham's family. Her dad has also been diagnosed with dementia and the beginning stages of Alzheimer's.

That's why she's become passionate about working to fund Alzheimer's research in the hopes of developing a cure and making a difference.

That passion pushed her to ask St. Elizabeth to sponsor a team in the Alzheimer's Association Walk To End Alzheimer's event for Grant, Pendleton and Bracken counties planned for Oct. 12 at Grant County Park.

Graham participated in the walk for the first time last year, but this year wanted to do more.

Her team, called the "Unforgettables" consists of friends, family, co-workers and her four children, will be participating in the "Forget Me Not" or opening ceremonies at 10 a.m. and will spend time walking to raise money.

Her mission is to "raise money and awareness."

Graham hopes the park will be filled with people walking with a purpose.

She'd like to bring her mom out to the event, weather permitting.

"You just never know in this life. It seems like there was a light switch that got turned off and then my mom was just gone. I know I can't do anything for my parents now but I don't want my children to have to go through this because it's a struggle," she said.

For more information about the walk go to www.alz.org/cincinnati or call Layne Haas at 800-272-3900.

Dr. Alice Heeger-Hartman voted in favor, but said she was reluctantly voting for the measure.

Nine people spoke against the tax with only one, Richard Bredenberg, a former board member, speaking in favor of it.

"People are bent to the limit," said Bobby Burgess, who spoke against the tax. "I spent five hours that day looking over water bills that people were having trouble paying. It was just the wrong time for the school board to raise taxes."

Burgess serves as chairman of the Bullock Pen Water District.

Bernice Delph of Mt. Zion, also spoke against the tax.

"People are having to budget their money and they (the school board) seem to me to be a bit extravagant. They also didn't give us a reason why they were going to raise taxes," Delph said.

Matt Morgan, assistant superintendent for finance and personnel, said this is the first year since the 2008/2009 school year that the board took the 4 percent compensating rate.

"In the good old days, we could take the 4 percent and actually decrease taxes," said Morgan. "The last two years we've taken the compensating rate just to keep at the same level due to increased costs."

If the school district were to collect 100 percent of the taxes owed them, they district would receive the following:

- Real estate - $4,978,198
- Tangible - $553,007
- Motor vehicle - $653,203
- Utility tax - $750,000

Morgan said that 17.1 cents of the new tax rate must go into the district's bond fund to pay for current bond obligations. Thirty-nine cents would go into the general fund.

Morgan said if the district had not taken the compensating rate this year, the board may have been forced to eventually make cuts, especially because of cuts to all federal programs, title I and special education programs.

"State allocations have also been reduced over the past several years," Morgan said.

Because of those cuts, Morgan said the district had the option of reducing services or funding programs through other funds.

His calculations show that since 2007, several programs have been severely impacted with textbooks, professional development for staff, safe schools and extended school services taking the biggest hits.

Morgan also said economic considerations also include items such as state retirement rising from 2.25 percent in 2014 and 3 percent in 2015.

The district has also received cuts to the state Support Education Excellence in Kentucky (SEEK) funding over the last several years. The school district in 2007-2008, received $16,112,978 in SEEK funding.

In 2013-2014, the district is projected to receive $15,442,614 in SEEK funding, or about 62.4 percent of the district's general fund revenue.

Taxes, including real and personal property taxes, motor vehicle, delinquent, omitted property and utility support roughly 20.2 percent of the district's general fund budget, according to Morgan.
